

Interpreting reports

Brief Synopsis:

Although next generation sequencing (NGS) has become commonplace for breast and other cancers, interpretation of reports remains a challenging unmet need. This is further confounded by the therapeutic importance of understanding and interpreting whether pathogenic variants/mutations are germline vs. somatic. Here we will discuss and provide examples of how molecular tumor boards can aid clinicians in providing interpretation of NGS results for optimal patient benefit.